Dear HSA Members and Friends:

Welcome to another issue of Frogpond. At this time, many of us are revising our winter haiku and anticipating the wonders spring has to offer. Spring, of course, is an optimistic time, a time of birth, a time of renewal.

I think we would agree that spring and all that it symbolizes couldn’t come soon enough this year, with the world in such a turbulent state. Perhaps you are asking “How might we make a difference?” Some choose the sword, but I expect most of us poets choose the pen. I think we forget sometimes how powerful the pen can be, but recently we have been reminded when First Lady Laura Bush cancelled the “Poetry and the American Voice” discussion at the White House on February 12, because poets rallied against the Administration’s stance on Iraq. This, I believe, should make clear the power we poets have to persuade and influence others.

Political themes are not common in haiku, but a poem needn’t be “political” to change the world. We should all be aware of what words can do, and writing haiku is as important as we think it is. It is part of a creative process that is much needed today. As poets, we should offer more beauty to the world. I can’t think of a group more qualified to do that than us. And to top it off, who else could do it in 17 syllables or less?

In peace and haiku friendship,

Stanford M. Forrester, President
1: An unrhymed Japanese poem recording the essence of a moment keenly perceived, in which Nature is linked to human nature. It usually consists of seventeen onji.

2: A foreign adaptation of 1, usually written in three lines totalling fewer than seventeen syllables.

(from A Haiku Path page 82 with corrections from page 80)
nearly spring
the house comes out of the hill’s shadow Dietmar Tauchner

spring breeze . . .
a whiff of new lumber and old cusswords
  Joan Morse Vistain

planting moon
the garden gate ajar
  James Fowler

early spring
yielding the road to the harrow Joann Klontz

sunlit hay
the peeps of a chick starting to hatch Ferris Gilli
early spring
a border of rabbits
in the nursery

Merle Hinchee

surely it’s in love with itself the pansy

Marlene Mountain

twisted onto the lilac a yellow bag
that caught the snowstorm

G. A. Huth

spring dusk
the sounds of a mole breaking grass roots

Ferris Gilli

ashen twilight—
why does a man dream of flatfish

Max Verhart
Cool spring dawn—
my first skipping stone almost makes it across

Rebecca Lilly

fishing stream
a young boy's rapture
over rainbow trout

kirsty karkow

mist across the docks
the darker shapes become boats, become bridges

Martin Lucas

having got past them
the paddling comes easier—
droopy willows

H. F. Noyes

March wind—
more garbage
in the trees

Hilary Tann
bird song—morning round of medicine

   piper

first spring day
the chatter
of the Starbucks staff

   Pamela Miller Ness

funny papers
getting lots of play—
spring wind

   Tom Tico

The cool dampness—dandelion greens gathered for a salad

   Rebecca Lilly

harp concert
the spiraling of wisteria

   G. J. Longenecker
this vine
trumpeting its presence flower by flower

Emily Romano

scented blossoms—
a tailor sewing in the rain tree’s shade

K. Ramesh

tossed treetops
the stillness shifts
its weight

Ed Duesterberg

thunderhead
a mass of starlings splits in two

Kay Grimnes

did only their songs alight in this field?
meadow larks

D. Claire Gallagher
the blast
of the noon siren summer heat

Tom Tico

summer heat
down the length of the cat's back

Rob Scott

fireflies at dusk
a train whistle
fades

Robert McNeill

twilight
pine scent rises from the circular saw

Gary Steinberg

moonless night
a pair of circling nightjars feed on stars

Rajiv Lather
wet toes—mudpies made fresh
by the lakeshore

Carmen Sterba

bone dry . . .
an aquarium net
full of flies

Joyce Sandeen Johnson

a wished wind . . .
her ashes
cross the lake

Joyce Sandeen Johnson

deep in the cave
the earth returns
my breath

Jeanne Emrich

a quiet stretch of river
the gull’s little kick into flight

Martin Lucas
beach fog—
the plunk
of a clammer’s pail

Dan McCullough

beach piling
a gust of wind
stirs the gull’s feathers

Peggy Heinrich

entering the port sail boats and sea gulls in a big flock

Vid Vukasovic

Crescent moon—
the white claw of a crab washes ashore

Edward Zuk

late summer wind—covering one bare foot with the other

Jack Barry
daybreak da fast-moving cloud joins another

Bruce Ross

full of agreement the sun and the green

Marlene Mountain

azure sky—
a distant episode of birds in flight

Giovanni Malito

ruins at dawn—
a black cat drinking from a patch of dew

Kristen Deming

white primrose
where rusty drops drip from the air conditioner

Linda Jeannette Ward
The Conscious Eye

Dee Evetts

In the previous issue I had occasion to comment on a poem by Lee Gurga that has the second line, “my son & I side by side.” Timothy Mize wrote to me in response: “I don’t think the use of the ampersand has to do with the avoidance of sententiousness. The “and” would connote equality, but just as ampersands in signage connote “another”, as in “Bob Jones & Son”, I believe the author used it to mean that he and his son were now on an equal footing, but not necessarily equal. Perhaps the father wasn’t ready to concede equality.”

I bring this up mainly to illustrate how variously a given haiku can be interpreted. And before I embark on another round of (it must be said, enjoyable) speculations, let me acknowledge once again that many readers will disagree with them, favoring their own. This is as it should be. Today I want to look at some poems that treat the subject of ageing or deceased parents. As usual I am most interested in work that manages to convey more than the writer’s feelings: if possible, some hint of a particular relationship.

Taking the material in the broadest sense chronologically, we could start with Gloria Jaguden’s telling glimpse:

his Father’s Day brunch from among the lemonades
he picks up the check

Here is a man accustomed to directing events, willing to sit back and enjoy being feted as a grandfather (the lemonades suggest) as well as a father, but—sharp as ever—quietly picking up the tab. Useless to argue with him, no doubt. The poet seems to observe all this with a loving acceptance.
A more complex poem is Alyson Pou’s sunlight shines red through my father’s thumb

on the steering wheel

This also depicts someone still in control—if not controlling, for that thumb is possibly a domineering one. On another level it suggests vulnerability, and mortality, and (the redness is blood, after all) an apprehension of almost visceral connection between generations.

This haiku by Paul M. shifts the scene at first glance not so very far:

sudden swell—
taking the tiller
from my father

But there is a very different feel to this relationship. It is fair to assume that the father once taught the son, that they sailed together as equals for many years, that the older man now has physical limitations. I don’t know how the poet achieves this (could it be the word “sudden”? ) but somehow we are made to understand that for neither one is this a problem.

Retirement comes as difficult transition for many, and time seems to hang heavy for the subject of Lee Gurga’s poem:

august heat—
dad calls after lunch with news of a murder

There is no suggestion of impatience here: rather, amusement and understanding mingled.

Things are much edgier in this situation so convincingly depicted by Alexis Rotella:

300 miles away
my father makes sure I hear him sigh

Rare the family that is entirely free of subtle reproaches, conveyed more often by a tone of voice than by the words themselves; or by a set of the mouth, a silence, an exhalation.

Another realm is entered when physical or mental incapacity are the case. There is a straightforwardness and innocence about Joanna Preston’s washing

my mother’s breasts
we both giggle

What for some could only be embarrassment, in this relationship is transformed by a shared sense of humor into a new and privileged kind of intimacy.

John Stevenson has a finely etched poem:

neatly made bed
a slight depression
where dad sat waiting

For all its clarity, much is unspecified here. We might be in a hospital, or alternatively a nursing home; we do not know who made the bed so neatly; it is not revealed for whom or for what the father was waiting. The exact circumstances are not important. What comes through so strongly and compassionately is the sense of a life reduced to very limited dimensions. But more than this: a recognition of (and a salute to) something steadfast, even stoic.

Dementia is surely one of the most taxing conditions for all involved, and to take it on poetically is a further act of courage—not least artistically. How to make the commonplace symptoms—forgotten names and faces, repetitive actions and questions—anything other than banal, without becoming maudlin? This approach by Pamela Miller Ness stands out:

Alzheimer’s ward again father counting the afghan squares

For me what renders this tenderly personal is the colored blanket—something familiar brought from home, we might conjecture. It serves to link present and past, thus widening the context and deepening the humanity of this poem.
Relationships belong to life, certainly, but are by no means ended by death. This is abundantly clear in Annie Bachini's news item—knowing exactly what my mother’s response would have been

In many African cultures a person’s physical dissolution is regarded as less significant than the final oblivion which comes when no-one who knew us remains alive. In the meantime we continue to play a significant role, however indefinable. As in this enigmatic piece by ai li:

the man who loved her his son sends a wreath

where the reader can discover a chain of repercussions. Viewed in this way, an individual’s life and death come to look more like an ever-widening ripple that interlaces with countless others.

* * *

1. Geppo XXIII:5
2. Frogpond XXIV:3
3. Agnieszka’s Dowry 12
4. Frogpond XXII:3
6. winterSPIN #40
7. Raw NerVZ VI:3
8. bottle rockets #3
9. Blithe Spirit 7:3

(Submissions for this column may be sent to Dee Evetts, 131 Roszel Road, Winchester, VA 22601. Please indicate whether the work has been previously published, supplying details.)
blooming in the late August garden
Easter lilies
  Merrill Ann Gonzales

late summer
black men spreading tar
on the side road Lenard D. Moore

summer departing—
the worn path
through the park Brian Gierat

lingering heat—
the dirt road ahead of me Martin Gottlieb Cohen

a cicada husk
clings to the weed stalk drifting seeds
  Lori Laliberte-Carey
autumn dusk
the neighbors' new car with the top down

Barry George

autumn bonfire
smoke from the driftwood floats out to sea

William Cullen Jr.

revolving door
the smell of burning leaves
each time

Gary Warner

last rays of sun—
in the alley doorway
the bus boy smokes

Michael Ketchek

cool city night asking the cabby
to turn up the jazz

Nathaniel Orion Tico
autumn equinox
under her fingers another lump Kay Grimnes

a walk in the woods—
my presence
stirs and quiets
J. D. Heskin

an old song
going way back in the crow
Robert Henry Poulin

solitary walk—
kicking up the scent of wet pine needles Adelaide B. Shaw

silver moon
scouring the cook pot with creek gravel Darrell Byrd
frost warning—
my flowers brighten the garage

Flori Ignoffo

finches leaving and with them
daylight savings time

Kimiyo Arai

school letting out a muskrat scurries
back to the water

Tom Clausen

A flick of the switch—dark clouds drifting across the harvest moon

Marilyn Siers

haloed moon—
the dark space between my neighbors' houses

Lenard D. Moore
the tea bag is cold outside the moon shines on the road

Francis Duvall

hardened squeeze dents
in the hand lotion cold, blustery day

Burnell Lippy

first winter rain combing my old vinyls
for The Delta Blues

Robert Gilliland

Three geese are calling resting by the frozen lake.
Branches wrapped in ice.

Mark Krusec

winter rain—
the bright colors
of the playground benches

A. C. Missias
all day the darkness
in the kindling box
first snow

_Burnell Lippy_

winter sun warms my face
the sermon on listening

_Randy M. Brooks_

the sun glares off ice-coated trees
we ride in silence

_Altern McGill_

taking the garlands of light from their cartons—
the longest night

_Kristen Deming_

holiday rush—draped over a porch rail
the deflated Santa

_Connie Donleycott_ Christmas Eve
the small snow patch
by the back porch

_Bruce Ross_

a shaving kit
in our teen’s bathroom—
the year begins

_Joann Klontz_

New Year . . .
my focus shifts
beyond the rain

_Michael Evans_

24

New Year’s Day
trunks of river birch emerge from fog

_Mark Smith_

January
her halo
(just breath)

_Mike Taylor_
Year of the Dragon smoke from firecrackers floats through the alley

Nathaniel Orion Tico

crossing between the bridge towers north wind

Ruth Holzer

short icicles on the new homes

Hilary Tann

winter sun
the patina of small scratches
on a dinner plate

Peggy Willis Lyles

no ears
on my shadow—winter quiet

Mark Cunningham
unemployment line
this winter will end
they say

  Gary Steinberg

another short day—
not sure who owes whom a letter

  Tom Clausen

snowy lake—walking on the light of a hazy moon

  Robert Mainone

moon under ice
where the divers have stopped searching

  Judson Evans

snow wind—
wringing the tea bag
until it tears

  Robert Gilliland
storm warning—
a run on milk
and daffodils

Barbara Cardamon

winter rain
a flowered umbrella
at the funeral

Carol Raisfeld

harrowed field
around family gravestones
the scent of spring

Linda Jeannette Ward

the man bends and whispers a greeting her name in stone

Greg Piko

stray hairs
from my new haircut almost spring

Cherie Hunter Day
1: A Japanese poem structurally similar to the Japanese haiku but primarily concerned with human nature; often humorous or satiric.

2: A foreign adaptation of 1.

(from A Haiku Path page 82 with corrections from page 80)
before dawn
the Quaker Oats man
a little too cheerful

Dean Summers

friendly hug
we kiss the small space between us

Dorothy McLaughlin

reunion
my wife approaching her mother

Tom Painting

cell phones on Mt. Fuji telling people
what it's like on top

Kathryn Davies

in the sand
he oversees the building of her castle

Shawn Davis
bleak cave walls
a red ocher I-was-here
handprint

Francine Porad

daily walk changes with the tide

Tim Bravenboer

their parrot swearing at our parakeet

Emily Romano

recycling bin
so many smiles piled up on election day

Deb Baker

shyness is genetic depression is genetic wind in my face

Larry Hussey Irish folk songs
in the rustic cafe aroma of mint

Elizabeth Howard

53rd Street station
a trumpet muted
by the F train

Bob Boni

she smiles at him and swings a tea bag back and forth distant church bell

Ross Figgins

gazing upward
for another love song club pianist

Marian Olson

Easter Sunday:
the astonished look on all the bowling balls

Patrick Sweeney
estate sale one picture frame nobody looks out of

_Ernest J. Berry_

health food store—
a gaunt sales clerk’s recommendation
_F. Matthew Blaine_

campfire
just enough stoking
for a fish story
_R. A. Stefanac_

cancer ward
too hot too cold too bright what else is there to do _David Gershator_

men’s shop trying to find something she likes _Tim Bravenboer_
open wide does the blue sky fill my dentist’s window

James Paulson

crowded mall
water magnifies a goldfish
in a plastic bag

Peggy Willis Lyles

standing beside Giacometti’s Standing Man—a cell phone rings

Anita Beverly Wintz

musing over haiku
the stewardess asks
do I want a pillow

Yu Chang

Sunday arts fair
the clouds in the sky
in the painting

Robert Epstein through my stethoscope
the rumble of the 8:15

Jon Iddon

tilt of the cowboy hat—
his wheelchair crosses against traffic

D. Claire Gallagher

hot day
the monkey throws the peanut back at us

William Cullen Jr.

mourning
an alcoholic brother’s death—
the whole bottle

George Dorsty

Knossos a snake in each of Her hands and still defiant

Karma Tenzing Wangchuk (for Marlene Mountain) after picketing
at the Gallo Winery
a cup of coffee

Alvaro Cardona-Hine

writing a haiku
in seventeen syllables
for the feel of it

R. A. Stefanac

watching my son's
first Little League game, from a distance

Mike Dillon

between your room and mine
two doors

Nancy Prasad

mortuary parking lot—a token required
to get out

Carolyn Hall
cleaning house
I pick up old daydreams

Margarite Engle

cracked glass over the photo
her lips parting to speak

Randy M. Brooks

rush hour
sweet pipe tobacco
from the car ahead

Gary Warner

grandparents’ day—school desks and chairs fit better this year

Richmond D. Williams

walking home
the little leaguer swings for the fences

Michael Fessler Entrance test
roll call name the same first syllable

  David McMurray

first appointment—
the young dentist winces
along with me

  Pamela Connor

lightning strike
the soloist starts
where she left off

  Miriam Olson

snowblower
a sharp edge
at the property line

  Yu Chang

getting it after 50 books
zen is not in books

  Robert Epstein
with bowed head
I ascend the church stairs—
first bifocals

   John J. Dunphy

yoga class unable to move from child's position

   John O'Connor

running barefoot through tall grasses—deciding on blonde

   Marilyn Appl Walker

on our way
to march for peace,
who's driving?

   Susan Antolin

I wade in the brook
that he loved to paint—pull of the current

   Merrill Ann Gonzales
therapist’s office whispering secrets
to her teddy bear

John J. Dunphy

old photos faces obscured
by smoke

Alan McGill

first lipstick
it changes her forever

Stanley Pelter

library queue discussing fiction
with a stranger

Vanessa Proctor

laugh lines deeper—the comedian’s wife

Dorothy McLaughlin
surrounded by these terrible people he wants to be

Carly Edelstein

at the vanity—unable to think of one good thing

Arlie Parker

fading twilight
in the hospital bed her face disassembles

Hillary Shurtleff

waiting room silence . . .
the surgeon’s approach
on green paper feet

Anne LB Davidson

watercolor class
in the crumpled paper towel
the freshest colors

Ruth Yarrow
at the fair
two didgeridoo players
swap email addresses

_Catherine Bullock_

I hear myself thinking I have a black dress
if she dies

_Bonnie Stepenoff_

super market thunder
the fly finds another cabbage

_Marilyn Appl Walker_

my life story
to a stranger . . . bags shift in the overhead bin

_Carolyn Hall_

cassette tape sound of the tonearm reaching the last groove

_Carlos Colón_ linked forms march tree buds

    talking about the size of her tumor

        a sweat bee cuts through a leftover piece of ham

watching CNN camouflaged soldiers in the mess hall

        in the box of doll house furniture
        a little green army man Only

autumn
the path along the river grows narrow

home from my travels my dark house greets me

for the last time looking at the mountain that is only a hill

by her sick bed
sprig of pussywillow
in a stone vase

autumn grass waving with one shadow

Leatrice Lifshitz Countdown

alone with wind and mud and whatever that means if anything broken wheelbarrow against the brick wall daffodil and iris tips already are they certain my spirit's ready bits and pieces of blue warmth fall through the cracks where i want to be with little to stay on a new countdown to life as we don't know it or want to know it owned now by the media lives of the dead astronauts

Marlene Mountain
first frost—
she adds more cinnamon sticks to the hot cider

he peppers the conversation with off-color jokes

red sky—
the old salt mends old nets

once in a blue moon smoked whitefish on sale at the deli

your minty kiss—
total eclipse of the sun

attempting to curry favor with his English teacher—purple prose singles

all the weight she’s lost since divorcing him his pickup lines and toupee spring chill her yes sounds like no another date with Amelie glancing back at her glancing at me says she needs to spend time with her cats
the daughter’s crayon drawing of us in over my head and a head shorter than she is I can’t find a date for the wedding
the young widow requests “Rock of Ages” reunited through the classifieds four left feet two-step reading a love letter on the elevator
all the weight she’s gained since he left her

Christopher Patchel
Climb to the Churdhar Peak

The trail curves left and right through dense forest, always climbing. Not used to such high altitude, we are all short of breath. Heavy rucksacks don't make the job any easier. As the air gets more fragrant, it also gets chillier. On the way, a pack train loaded with supplies overtakes us. We are now above the tree line, and even though it is early summer, patches of snow can be seen. By evening, we reach the temple on the peak, just as the rain begins.

The weather, and the fact that the journey back to the village will take more than six hours, forces us to spend the night here.

Priests and their help cook us a dinner of hot tea and parathas (unleavened flat bread fried on a griddle). As no one is allowed to sleep inside, the visitors huddle together in the verandah. Wet and shivering, our team gets inside their sleeping bags.

icy dawn
the stink from our shoes covered with mule dung

Rajiv Lather

These Frozen Woods

The translucency of mind in these frozen woods. My steps follow the long-hardened footprints of others down this path. Not here just a few days ago, a tiny, desiccated snake curled into itself, almost a circle, flattened to the frozen snow. A step past it like a bonsai island set piece a foot high evergreen in the center of a small mound of pebbly earth surrounded by a perfect ring of black ice. With the wind circling from this point above me one hemlock creek after another fills the silence.

cold blue sky almost seeing through the full day moon

Bruce Ross
Safe House

2:00 A.M. SATURDAY. A call from the sheriff’s office beckons me to a holding cell for juveniles: the same bare cement floor with an open bolted-down toilet as used for adults but solitary. A 14-year-old paces the disinfected stench of the place, nowhere to go when he ran into the storm-drenched street of this small town . . . he barely looks up as he’s led from the cell to accompany me to a safe house where he’ll have time to recover from the blackened eyes inflicted by his father...a broken bug light dotted with bugs casts a yellow glow at the end of the walkway where a doorbell responds to my press with silence . . .

rain pelts the awning—
a fist-size indentation
in the group home door

Linda Jeannette Ward

High Tide

IT’S THE SEA OF COURSE that has the voice. You know it, but still come deliberately to the beach to shout. All the way in the car you’ve held the sound in the box with the lid clasped.

bird shit precisely
in the middle of the windsreen

You drive into an angle park, wishing you had a dog - a reason to throw driftwood endlessly. Walk anyway, watch your feet follow someone else’s track, streamers of wind scarfing over your shoulder. Gulls screech.

deserted beach—
high tide
flips the carapace

Helen Bascand
Tassels

Last year we began to see babies wearing double-peaked caps with two tassels, one bobbing over each ear. These caps came in soft jellybean colors: cinnamon, raspberry, tangerine, lemon, peppermint, grape. They were one of those simple, inexpensive inventions like beanie babies, that spring from nowhere and are seen everywhere, and then go on to make a lot of money for someone. In a further burst of exuberance, they evolved into three-tasselled caps, four-tasselled caps, and more. Never had babies looked more adorable.

Everyone smiles
at the baby in the hat
the baby smiles back

Of course such an original item can’t remain exclusively for infants. Today I saw an older boy in a yellow cap with three tassels over one ear and a long, droopy tail over the other. It won’t be long before tassel hats become a fashion statement. I could be a pioneer! I toy with the idea of going into a children’s shop and trying one . . . .

After a lifetime of wearing many hats
why not a child’s?

Doris Heitmeyer

Adult Condor No. 8

matriarch of a captive breeding program yielding 250 chicks, was shot and killed by a poacher in the grassy foothills of southern California.

clear skies watching the salmon spawn with my adopted son

w. f. owen
Venice after the Carnival

old easel—
how many recollections of that studio

I “had seen” Venice before visiting it. At that time, in 1973, I was preparing a paper on veduta and was attentively searching for reproductions of Canaletto’s and Guardi’s paintings. Writing that paper I found out that a veduta was, for the wealthy foreigners who used to visit Venice during the 17th and 18th centuries, in some way the equivalent of our postcards. Coming back to their countries they brought famous views of Venice to remind themselves of what they had visited and to be able to talk about them. In Italian veduta means an urban view or what can be seen. But how could I see Venice through those reproductions? Why did that city suspended between sky and waters attract me so much? Both Canaletto and Guardi captured the unique beauty of Venice, with green waters reflecting the light on its walls, its canals, its surrounding islands, and its people passing through small squares or under arcades. Yet each of the two painters showed me his own Venice.

cumulus clouds—
on the wooden platform sound of steps

I arrive in Venice on a cold winter morning. From the station I take a vaporetto. I am so impatient to see the city. After a few minutes I am on Canale de la Giudecca. We sail fast and I have the impression that both sides of the canal have large vessels that go in opposite directions. I get off the boat at Piazza San Marco. The city seems sleepy after the last night of the Carnival. It is so quiet near me that I can hear the ceaseless murmur of the water against the stone bank. Empty gondolas are swinging and waiting for the tourists. Each gondola has its own cadence. I walk toward San Marco Basilica and notice the remaining confetti among the paving stones. In a corner, under an arcade, I can see a forgotten golden mask. It is said that a mask makes everyone equal. During the Carnival masks allow people to dare many things... Now the mask has no power. It is laying on the ground in shadow and dampness. One of the dilemmas of the people participating in the Carnival is whether to be or not to be seen... It seems to me that Venice was faced during its history by the same dilemma, like a woman who wishes to be seen sometimes and prefers not to be observed other times. Century after century Venice knew brilliancy. Now she is old and wishes to show her "jewelry" to visitors and would like not to be disturbed by the waters of the lagoon.

in an atrium
the story of Noah told in Japanese

Near the door of a house, on the steps, as in a still life, there is an empty champagne bottle, three glasses and a paper plate. Traces of the last night of Carnival. On the roof of a palace a banner is flying in the wind. I guess it was for the Carnival too. The city seems to be slowly awakening, as after a wedding party. I am glad that there are no visitors in the Piazza San Marco at this time. I can go everywhere without being disturbed by tourists. Only a flock of pigeons follows me on the paving stones. I take a seat at a sidewalk café to drink a cappuccino. I exchange some sentences with the waiter. Hearing that it is my first day in Venice he regrets my missing the Carnival. I tell him that I do not like the crowded events and prefer a quiet visit. He looks astonished and wishes me a nice stay. Another flock of pigeons makes a great ellipse in the sky and lands on the roof of the belfry.

changing light—
an embroidered table cloth keeps a wet smell

I close the guidebook and my map of the city. I intend to wander through that part of the city unfamiliar to foreigners. I want to discover the Venice which you can't see in Canaletto's and Guardi's paintings, full of famous views, great ceremonial occasions, festivals and regattas. But how to see that Venice which hides when I try to find it? I take a walk with no aim through the private city. Here is no place for magnificence. I am in the web of small streets and canals. Any corner or any house is completely different from anything you expect to see. Here is the ideal place to meander in solitude. From time to time, near the door of the houses I meet a tiny boat or a modest gondola which still bears signs of the Carnival. The walls of the houses which are built so close together reveal layers of colours. It is worth examining the perfect harmony of their dark and bright nuances. Any painter would envy the anonymous master of these “hidden galleries”. You have the impression that these houses have been built for the sake of beauty and not to live in. Only the clotheslines from one side to another of the narrow street remind you that people live here.

Giorgione’s Tempest—
so much stillness
in the museum

Is what I see indeed Venice? Or does she know how to hide under a veil, under a mask of time? My grandfather used to say: “If you want to see a beautiful woman you have to look at her when she is not prepared for a fancy-dress ball.” Venice is a place in which every house, every street or canal is unique unto itself, like a beautiful woman who puts out of sight her mystery. Moreover the patina of the stone, brick and marble walls has a melancholy and nostalgia of old times. Each loggia, balcony, and door pulsates with its own hidden splendour. You are tempted to touch it silently.

stone angel—a row of dolls
on the windowsill

My steps echo along a small dead-end street. In a sunny corner a cat is resting. We each look at the other without disturbing his solitude. The calm of the bright winter day makes me linger on this lane. After a few minutes I pass by a canal whose moving waters reflect the playing light onto my body. I stop walking and let the light stroke my face. I enjoy this moment and think I am a small part of this silent and hidden veduta.

hung by a string
an empty basket
swings in the breeze
Without any plan my path passes by the fruit and vegetable market near Ponte di Rialto. I can hear the shopkeepers’ guttural voices calling customers in the Venetian dialect. When they observe a foreign customer, Italian words are mingled with English expressions. I always enjoy seeing a market-place. When I am abroad this pleasure is even greater. The fresh colours of fruit and vegetables are a delight to look at. I can’t stop admiring their form, structure, texture, and the way they are displayed. It is a real show. Suddenly I feel the cold smell of fish. I am on the bank of the fish market. A Neo-Gothic hall provides enough room for the fishermen. Of course, due to their abundant catch, these fishermen missed the last night of the Carnival.

decaying fresco—
I leave the stillness

to the spiders

Going aimlessly all the way through the labyrinth of streets and canals in front of me, I can see Campo dei Mori, a small square in the middle of which there is a well covered by an iron lid. I go round the well to admire the skillful bas-relief ornamentation carved in marble. A church bell from the neighbourhood suddenly rings and makes me look up at the sky. I would like to ask somebody if this well has potable water but there are no passers-by. I try to move the lid. It is in vain. The lid doesn’t move at all. I scan with my eyes all the tile-roofed houses that surround the square. Noticing that I am looking in her direction, an old woman at a window disappears immediately behind the curtain.

Renaissance patio—
I try to decipher something written in Latin

San Giorgio Magiore Island is not far from me. I can see the island at a glance. This hour has a soft light. That afternoon light you meet in Leonardo’s and Titian’s paintings. Between the island and me are the waters of Canal San Marco. The distance doesn’t allow me to observe the architectural details. The horizontal and vertical lines of the buildings are balanced by the round forms of the roofs and the arrow of the bell tower. In front of me a gondolier passes with no passenger. He doesn't roar. No song is heard. The gondola seems pushed only by his silence.

chill wind—
the loneliness
of that tide marker

It is evening. The sky turns gray. The colours of the buildings, pavement and water receive dark tones. From the lagoon the fog is approaching more and more like a phantom. The contour of the forms disappears. Silhouettes of the gondolas and boats are only moving spots along the Canal Grande. Layers of mist come and go, cover and uncover palaces, towers, houses, boats, and people.

Murano chandeliers—golden light slips out
from a balcony

From a bar, faint music is heard. A young couple hesitates to go in. I think they are foreign tourists too. The man asks me in English the way to Vivaldi's church, where a concert is going to start in a few minutes. The woman lifts the collar of her winter coat to cover her cheek. She looks a bit tired. I wonder if she participated in the last night of Carnival. Did she wear a mask?

I am again in Piazza San Marco. This time no pigeon follows me. People talk in small groups about the last night of the Carnival. A mime changes his masks but nobody notices him.

into the night
the water strokes a palazzo whose glory is lost

Ion Codrescu
frame

Columbia the only cloud in the sky

. . . this Zaprudler film called LIFE jerks its celluloid past the light provided by God in a continuous loop hanging on frames of imploded buildings, shiny black walls growing out of the ground, powered-up rockets red glare to the tune of Jimi Hendrix on a farmland stage . . . i have seen this movie before . . . but God, the merciful God of your choice, has included subliminal clips between the ugliness, concession breaks of soft blue skies and flowers and children’s smiles and homeade ice cream on a hot day and hope . . .

winter stars we walk into the theatre for a double-feature

w. f. owen

Flash Photography

A professional singer, I was booked into an exclusive dinner house in London called “The Society Restaurant”. My résumé included making movies, television appearances, a Broadway show, a Verve record, and assorted guest spots. This was the first time I had been abroad and I was looking forward to going to England.

After a long flight from New York, the plane finally landed at Heathrow Airport. Outside the window were a half-dozen or so photographers milling about with their cameras. Oh boy, I thought, there must be someone famous on this flight. Wonder who it could be.

As I was deplaning, an airport representative approached me and asked,

“Are you Peggy Sands?” (The name I used for singing)
“Yes, I am,” I said, bewildered.
“Would you mind joining us in the VIP lounge?”

Well, the famous person—or should I say infamous—person they were meeting, was me!

After I sat down and sipped some cool soda, the representative showed me a newspaper. He asked if the photograph of a woman with her face half-hidden could be mine.

It was a picture of a famous prostitute involved with a norious mobster. There had been an arrest and a big trial in London. To top it all off—her name was “Peggy Sands”!

I didn’t know whether to laugh or cry. After I convinced them I was not that particular person, the photographers left. They seemed very disappointed.

foggy day alone
in a London airport

Margaret Hehman-Smith

Haibun

The sparkle of glass, which lured me from the path, was just silver foil, an outer wrapping for newly planted tulips. Red tulips in the forest! Curious, I let myself be drawn into the shade of an old scrub oak that seemed to watch over the strange flowers.

At the foot of the tree I discovered a makeshift shrine. The flowers were but an offering. Carved in white on the crosspiece of a black arabesque crucifix were the numbers “8-3-70” and “12-14-00.” Probably a horse, I thought. On the vertical axis, reading down, white letters spelled out “Oliver.” A beaded, black leather strap—a bridle?—hung loosely where the arms of the cross conjoined.

Suddenly the ground shook with the pounding of hooves and standing beside me was a fine chestnut mare ridden by a young girl in English habit. The horse paused, noticing me, but the disciplined rider did not divert her eyes from the steep path ahead. She did not see me kneeling at the grave. Leather stretched and squeaked, a tail swished, as they settled in for a moment. The mare then discharged a quick breath, as if on cue, and the girl clicked the horse into a gallop. The clop of hooves resounded against the dirt, diminishing as they topped the hill. Dust fell back in their wake and the woods grew still again.

quiet stables—
the moonlight
in a stallion’s eye

Rich Krivcher
Off-White Supremacists

The Ku Klux Klan has held several cross-burnings in my community. I observed one from a safe distance. About 150 figures in pointed hoods and long robes were gathered around a huge wooden cross that had been set aflame. A speaker harangued the crowd. A wind came up, and the brilliant robes rippled and shined at first, but grew duller as the rally went on, sullied by the oily smoke.

sunrise
a cardinal perches on the charred cross

John J. Dunphy

Living Statues I: Liberty

Battery Park, July 2002. Almost a year after the fall of the World Trade Center, security is unobtrusive. Few barriers remain. The park is swarming with vendors and sightseers, many wearing spiky green styrofoam crowns as they line up for the Statue of Liberty. What's new are the Living Statues.

on the way to the ferry five Statues of Liberty of varying heights.

They wear copper-green draperies, have green arms and the same styrofoam crowns as the tourists. The best turned out and most professional of these young ladies does a convincing imitation, though her sharp features make her look a bit too shrewd. She scarcely blinks until a tourist drops a coin in the box at her feet. Then she breaks the pose to bend fluidly in a slow, graceful obeisance.

late afternoon sun
gleaming through harbor smog
her gold-plated torch.

Doris Heitmeyer
Looking Back on an Old Journey

In the autumn of 1988 I set out on a journey to Eastern Europe—Poland, the Ukraine, East Germany. Ostensibly it was to do background research for a book of stories I was writing about the Fools of Chelm, the legendary numskulls of the Jewish oral tradition. Though I had known these stories since childhood, I needed a landscape to place them in. I needed to learn about the trees and flowers, to experience sunrises and sunsets, to feel the rain, to walk in the mud.

Recently, while looking through my notebooks, I was surprised to discover that even though I filled scores of pages, I had written only a few poems during my month’s sojourn there. Why so few is evident from those that did get recorded.

Road Kill

these seven geese never whiter than now soaked in their own blood

Sunday at Auschwitz

high school students hurrying to finish their ice cream before entering the crematorium

Dawn at Majdanek

all these crows
on the white gravel betray the official silence

Pines at Sobibor

this memorial grove
still twisted and stunted forty years later

Flashback at Belzec

twilight
a distant train whistle
true terror

Steve Sanfield
Presenting Haiku
Considerations for the Oral Interpretation of Haiku

Haiku can be sung, chanted, danced and presented in sign language but most often are just read aloud. Haiku enthusiasts often find themselves in the situation of having to present some poems orally for various kinds of audiences. According to Dr. Randy Brooks, in Japan the presentation of haiku was more visual than oral with a part of the art being the calligraphy on the shikishi, the narrow scrolls that sometimes included a painting vertically displayed on a wall.¹ During the sixteen hundreds in Japan at the renga parties the poetry was recited or shared orally as well as written down.

In the West, oral presentation of haiku is common. Sometimes these performance experiences can be uncomfortable and frustrating. The purpose of this discussion is to offer some ideas, methods and techniques that can improve the performances for both the presenters and the audiences. This discussion will focus on the presenter of haiku as a performer seen and heard by an audience, either live or on video. The occasion can be a meeting, an interview, a bookstore reading, or a lecture at a conference. The following information can be utilized in any of these situations.

Homework

Prepare the Material

First, the poem or poems, which are to be presented, need to be analyzed and understood. After carefully studying the haiku one technique is to say to oneself, “in other words—” and then reword the poem in complete sentences with adjectives and adverbs. This will create a full mental picture that can be recalled when the presentation occurs. Always try to stay faithful to the intentions of the original author. If the presenter has written the haiku, then this part of the preparation may be easier.

For each poem decide on the relationship between the presenter and the audience. Giving the poem directly to the audience with direct eye contact is called the presentational style. Another way, is when the performer experiences the haiku in his or her own “world” with the audience seeing it through an invisible fourth wall which can be called the dramatic style. A third method is sharing the experience of the haiku as though the audience is another character in the presenter’s “world”.2

Who is experiencing the events of the haiku? Is there a different personality or character or is it being experienced by the presenter? Assuming a different character or a role will require some acting skills but it can be an effective technique. The presenter’s choice of perspective will depend on what seems most effective for each poem and what the presenter feels most comfortable doing.

If time allows, fully memorize the haiku but having a script in view can help build confidence. Using large print with notations in different colors makes for easy reference if a word or idea slips the mind. Remember, whether presenting one haiku or several haiku as part of a longer lecture, these techniques can still be utilized.

Prepare for the Performance

The presenter’s main tools for communication are the voice, body, arms, hands, and face. Appropriate use of all of these will make the presentation of the poems more fulfilling for both the presenter and the audience.

Vocal Techniques

The voice is the vehicle. Clear and appropriate pronunciation, articulation, phonation and resonance are important.
Know the meanings of all the words in the poem and how to say them correctly. Say each part of every word clearly.
Allow each sound to fully develop in the chest, head and mouth. Be clear and precise but avoid sounding phony. A general rule is to clip the consonants and prolong the vowel sounds. A presentation is not like a “one-to-one” conversation, so think of projecting the voice out to the audience.

The meaning and emotion of the haiku comes from the appropriate variety of the pitch, pace, power and pause.
The variation of pitch is the intonation and inflection in the voice. It is the song or highness and lowness of the tone.
Monotone is boring. A sing-song pattern is also boring.
Variation of pitch is important to maintain the audience’s interest, understanding and emotional involvement. The Japanese haiku generally contain cutting words or kireji. These joining, separating or exclamation words tell the reader to stop and take notice. However, in English if there is no punctuation and these cue words are missing then the reader needs to express this emotion or cut with the interpretation techniques.

The pace is the speed at which the words are spoken and joined together into images. The presenter already has the ideas clearly in his or her mind. The audience needs the time to go through four steps for the full, effective communication of the poem. Each member of the audience needs to be able to 1) hear, 2) think, 3) react or feel, and 4) understand. If a presenter keeps this four-step process in mind then the audience will have time to appreciate the poem. Again, variety of tempo adds interest.

Vary the intensity and volume. Both of these help put the emphasis on the important words and create the subordination of the less important words, which the earlier analysis has determined. Allowing for proper pauses helps the phrasing and timing. Because haiku are short, take time to orally present each image appropriately. Remember to project to the back wall of the space in which the event occurs. There is a heightened realism when presenting poetry but don’t overact.

Develop a Script

As the vocal interpretation develops, mark the script by underlining with two lines the words to be strongly emphasized. Moderate emphasis with one line. Perpendicular lines between words denote pauses. Two for a longer pause one for shorter. With wavy lines the presenter can show upward or downward inflection. Each person can develop his or her own method of notation. Using the word processing program on the computer can provide interesting possibilities. Adding an additional space between the letters in a word or placing words on different lines can denote specific interpretations. Using different colors of ink or pencils for the notations can help show emotional content. Have several copies of the script for practicing and developing. Once there is a satisfactory performance script, make a second copy of it in case one is misplaced or lost.

For example, let’s look at this poem.
across the window
of an abandoned house
a wisteria bloom

The following are some markings using word processing on the computer for suggesting the emphasis, tempo, pauses and inflection.

across the win—dow
of an a b a n d o n e d h o u s e—//
a w i s—t e r i a b l o o m——

Each performer will find the system of notation that works best for him or her.

Animation

Body language, gestures and facial expressions are included in the concept of animation. The amount and kind of animation depends on the specific haiku, the personality of the performer, and the audience. For most poetry "subtlety" is the best policy.

As the poem is being analyzed think of how the voice and body can work together to best express the images. In the above poem, just before voicing the first image, a subtle gesture of the dominant hand could precede "across the . . .". Generally, animation precedes the voicing of an idea. Action precedes words. The reverse is often funny. Subtlety is important for a haiku like this one. There would be positive feeling in the voice and on the face during the last line "a wisteria bloom".

The facial expressions will also depend on which perspective the performer takes. If the poem is presented for the audience then more facial expression is used but if the audience is looking through the fourth wall, then there will be less.

Gestures are used to suggest meaning, to emphasize an idea, or to demonstrate an action. For most poetry, "less is more". As Shakespeare says "fit the actions to the words". Avoid excess movement and "hamminess". For an exercise during a rehearsal, try putting a gesture, action or facial expression with every word. Then cut it back or edit it and go for the appropriateness, fitting the animation to the meaning. This experiment can help free up those who consider themselves "stiff" performers.

Practice or rehearse the presentation several times. Practice does make perfect. Use a mirror, a tape recorder and/or a video recorder. No one looks and sounds the way he or she imagines so don’t be too self-critical. Rehearse the entire presentation several times for the tape or video recorder until the performance feels secure. Try it on a friend or family member. Keep in mind that criticism is only as good as the critic.

The Environment

Try to learn about the setting and the audience for the presentation. Where is the performance to take place and for whom? Get a clear idea of the stage area for the presentation and of the available lighting. Will there be a lectern or speaker’s stand? Will there be a microphone? Is it a stand, hand held or a lavaliere microphone? Will there be an opportunity for a sound check? Can there be a rehearsal or at least a “walk through” in the performance space?

The Audience

Who is the intended audience? How many people will there be? How much do they know about haiku? What is the age range? Why are they there? Clear answers to all the above questions are the ideal, but most often there will be only partial information so always be prepared to improvise.

Because haiku are so short, they are often recited and then repeated so that the audience can get the full impact. To duplicate the exact reading is nearly impossible. Just try to have the same mind set and take the time to glance at the marked script again. Take a deep breath and repeat the poem.

Dress Appropriately

The audience sees the presenter and gets a first impression; therefore, the presenter will want to exhibit the appropriate image for the specific event. Know how formal or informal the clothing should be. Make sure the clothing and shoes are comfortable and appropriate for the planned movements and gestures.

The center of communication is the eyes. They are referred to as the “window to the soul”. Don’t obstruct the view of the eyes with hair, a hat, or dark glasses. Keep the chin up. If eye contact with the audience bothers the presenter, then look just above the heads of the audience. Avoid looking down at the floor. If the poem requires looking down, then look at a spot on the floor about ten feet ahead so the audience doesn’t feel cut off.

Self Preparation and Relaxation Techniques

Before “taking the stage” a forced yawn can relax the face and jaw muscles, which helps allow for natural facial expression and speech. A few deep breaths will also help. If the script has to be held, press the palms of the hands together in an isometric way for five to eight seconds. This helps to prevent shaking hands. Keep the knees “soft” and the pelvis gently rolled under to prevent vibrating legs. Quietly hum a favorite song or hymn to loosen the vocal mechanism. Lick the lips and swallow. Smile with the teeth slightly apart. Enter! Break a leg!

Jerome Cushman

[In his 40-year career Jerome Cushman has been a successful theatre director of over 100 plays. He has been a choreographer of dance and stage combat; an acting, voice and movement coach; an actor and dancer; but most importantly an educator of both hearing and deaf college students. Recently he originated and operated the Robert F. Panara Haiku Contest for the National Technical Institute for the Deaf at the Rochester Institute of Technology and The Tsukuba College of Technology in Tsukuba, Japan. The 2001 and 2002 contests were under the sponsorship of Pen-International and funded by The Nippon Foundation.

Over the past 28 years he has used haiku at NTID/RIT as a teaching tool and as part of various performances. The deaf actors signed the haiku while hearing actors spoke the poems. Through this activity, and his many years of studying and teaching acting and directing, he has developed his techniques for oral interpretation of poetry.]

1 This information was discussed in an e-mail to the author from Dr. Randy Brooks, 13 December 2001.
2 This information was developed from an e-mail to the author from poet and performer, John Stevenson. 13 December 2001.
Masahide and the Moon

kura yakete
sawaru mono naki
tsukimi kana (1)

Storehouse burned—
now nothing hides
the moon!

It seems that Basho's endorsement of this haiku, written by a samurai named Mizuta Masahide (1657-1723), wasn't enough to commend it to literary attention. Thus, it's not very often that we find it in an anthology of the genre. Some commentators, without ignoring it, overtly dismiss it. Thus does Makoto Ueda, in his otherwise splendid book Literary and Art Theories in Japan, where he condemns it, even without mentioning the author, as being "ludicrously pretentious" (165). His statement echoes Blyth's: "Masahide is famous for a very pretentious verse approved by Basho" (200).

The haiku, quite concrete, refers to an episode in Masahide's life, happened sometime around 1688: a fire destroys his storehouse. The fact must have been one mishap in a long series, because in 1703, a friend of his, by the name of Jozen, bares witness that Masahide became so poor that he couldn't afford even a blanket for his children. It is difficult to imagine a samurai living in such misery unless he abandoned a more comfortable life for something else, maybe for the intransigencies of literature or Buddhist spirituality. But let's read the poem again, trying to elucidate what lies behind the words:

Storehouse burned—
now nothing hides
the moon!

The haiku states simply: my storehouse caught fire, it all burned down and now I can see, unconcealed, the moon.

The haiku reminds me of the encounter between Diogenes and Alexander the Great, as recounted by Plutarch: "While he stayed here, many public ministers and philosophers..."
came from all parts to visit him, and congratulated him on his election, but contrary to his expectation, Diogenes of Sinope, who then was living at Corinth, thought so little of him, that instead of coming to compliment him, he never so much as stirred out of the suburb called the Cranium, where Alexander ran across him lying at full length in the sun. When he saw so much company near him, he raised himself a little, and vouchsafed to look upon Alexander; and when he kindly asked him whether he wanted any thing, 'Yes,' said he, 'I would have you stand from between me and the sun.'” (428).

Returning to our haiku, we could ask ourselves, somehow simplistically: all right, but with or without a storehouse, what’s the difference? Couldn’t he just go around and see the moon? Here the parallel to Diogenes is illuminating: both Masahide and Diogenes have a certain stubbornness to see something from their chosen place. A stubbornness, a radicalism which states that if I’m not able to see from anywhere I choose, then I will see from nowhere. That’s what Diogenes’ quirkiness implies. After all, we shouldn’t forget that he resists the temptation to have a wish fulfilled. But his refusal to have a wish satisfied, any wish, has the significance of refusing the wish pure-and-simple, the wish anytime-and-anywhere. It’s not a moment of ennui or of placid nonconformity, but a question of principle, of ethics. Diogenes’ subtext is that one cannot be sage (the metaphor is to see) with intermittence or conditionally and that in order to attain wisdom one has to abolish desire altogether. The same with Masahide, whom we can imagine having abandoned a more secure social position exactly for being able to “see”. Indirectly, he affirms that his own storehouse was bothering him, staying in his way to the moon. The haiku assumes that, before the accident, Masahide was suffering spiritual cataracts. Otherwise he wouldn’t exclaim that it’s (only) now that he can see (the moon). In spite of the sacrifices he must have endured all his life, he feels he was still far from the condition of seer. It’s only now that his eyes open, when a last obstacle disappears, when a last connection with the downward, with the mundane, is lost. The proximal materiality is exchanged for the remote moon. Only now, that he doesn’t have anything left, not even the wish of possessing, he has everything, he has the moon.

The haiku is not pretentious because it doesn’t pretend anything. It simply describes an actual fact of Masahide’s life, transfigured into a spiritual experience. As for the other sense of the word pretentious—intended to attract notice and impress others—we have no evidence whatsoever that this was his intention. On the contrary, the haiku is stern, somehow unadorned, and, more importantly, strikes a common vital chord. This explains why in the same period, Tachibana Hokushi (d. 1718) writes a comparable poem:

Onto the ashes where my cottage burned,
The cherry-blossoms scatter, unconcerned. (Stewart 35) and that, more than a century later, Issa Kobayashi (1763-1828) composes, in similar circumstances, a similar haiku. When his house is destroyed in Kashiwabara’s great fire in 1827, he writes on a playful tone:

House burnt down—
fleas
dance in embers. (Stryk 12)

and, in 1809 (he was then 46), after he loses his lodging, he writes:

Now without house—
I see spring
blossoming

These all are texts that transform a material loss into a spiritual rebirth.

Finally, we could ask ourselves: what was the moon to Masahide? The answer comes by itself: it’s what the sun was to Diogenes. Masahide would bond the rest of his life to it and, beyond, all his death, as one can see from his jisei (3):

yuku toki wa
It’s time to go—tsuki ni narabite
with the moon by my side
mizu no tomo
friend in the water. (4)

Stephen Broyard Works Cited

Ueda, Makoto. Literary and Art Theories in Japan. Cleveland: Western Reserve UP, 1967

Notes:

(1) Translated word by word, the poem goes:

kura (storehouse) yakate (to burn)
sawani (to hide) mono (thing) naki (no) tsukimi (moon’s view) kana (particle used as exclamation)

To a Western mind, the word storehouse can be misleading, in the sense that it gives an erroneous idea about Masahide’s well being. To own a storehouse was not by itself a proof of wealth.

(2) Some commentators mention that, by training, Masahide was a doctor. We have records that Basho, who at some point was his teacher, appreciated Masahide’s haiku (Hoffman 240)

(3) Jisei or death poem is a farewell poem to life, a last impression in which the author wraps his whole existence.

(4) As the English to go, the Japanese yuku has a double significance: to leave and to die. Inevitably, the last line (mizu no tomo) reminds us Basho’s line, the one from the "frog-haiku":

furuike ya
kawazu tobikomu
mizu no tomo

the old pond!
a frog jumps in—
the sound of water
Taking Time With a Favorite Haiku

summer afternoon
the long fly ball to center field takes its time

A central aspect of Cor van den Heuvel's "summer afternoon" is its movement from the particular to universal. At first reading, it may seem a simple depiction of a game of baseball being played on a summer afternoon. There is a nostalgic, almost sentimental, emotional tone to it. The words are about a very American experience—of a time when baseball was the quintessential American game.

After this initial impression, another facet becomes apparent. The poem slows down time in a number of ways. Take the second line "the long fly ball to center field." This is the longest line of the poem, with as many syllables as the other two lines together. It takes longer to read, drawing out the moment. Additionally, by putting five monosyllabic words one after the other the sense of measured, unhurried time is heightened. This language mirrors the feeling of a long, leisurely summer afternoon.

This drawing-out device also resonates with the image of the ball reaching the top of its arc. A batted ball moves with greatest speed at the beginning of its flight, and actually slows down as it reaches the apex of its trajectory. In this poem, the ball not only slows down, it "takes its time."

This is the central image—a moment of motion caught and portrayed as endless and eternal.

This poem may also be about youth—boys playing a game on a long, lazy afternoon. No boys are actually mentioned, but these are archetypal baseball players, the boys of summer. A particular experience, personal to the narrator, is shown to be common to humanity—the culturally limited image of American boys playing baseball becomes an example of a universal experience, youth celebrating youth.

There is also an element of sadness, of personal loss. And there is loss on a universal level—the glimpse of eternity will pass, eventually the ball will fall to earth. The fragility of the moment is keenly felt. This tension between the beauty of the moment glimpsed and the simultaneous understanding of its ephemeral nature is part of the allure of the poem. A boy could not write such a poem—only someone who sees the moment at a distance in time.

A final consideration: although the youth of any one person doesn’t last, being young as a shared experience of humanity does. The games of childhood go on. By expressing the experience, the poem allows the moment to attain a life beyond the boundaries of any single life. The moment remains available as long as there are people to read the poem.

Efren Estevez

Favorite Haiku

sprouting growing blossoming happiness

Santoka

The unrestrained joy in the budding and blossoming is most appealing. A similar awe was expressed by Tolstoy, but without the ebullience: “The buds cram-full, the little plant leafs out, and simply grows.” Santoka, an early twentieth century poet, was unable to give up the life of a mendicant wanderer because of the profound experience of “happiness” nature’s bounties bestow, and the peace of mind of a life of choiceless awareness. There’s a Taoist saying, “To the mind that is still, the world surrenders.” In the unforgettable lines of Keats, Poetry “tears us out of thought / As doth eternity.”

H. F. Noyes

2. Letters.
3. “Ode on a Grecian Urn”.

Re:Readings

You are gradually insuring that this column will achieve its potential. The first column was written entirely by Frogpond staff. The second was about one-third your material and this one is over one half. The goal is that it will consist entirely of your readings. So, get out your pencils and start rereading this issue. In the meantime, here are some poems from XXVI:1 that have been singled out for comment.

Merrill Ann Gonzales tells us: “. . . the haiku that seem to move me, make me more aware, (are) . . . those with a tactile sensation that transcends the physical, moving on to some wisdom of the race.” She refers specifically to Yasuhiko Shigemoto’s “Plowing—/the actual feeling/of my living”, Dorothy Howard’s charming miniature “rain/drops” and Michael Ketchek’s “summer brook/which ones/are the stepping stones”. She adds this idea, which we have all pondered, “I’m not sure whether this more reflects the state of my life at the present, or the quality of the haiku . . . but then, perhaps that’s what makes any haiku resonate?”

Carolyn Hall writes to say how she keeps coming back to Tom Clausen’s “our turn/to stand here—/falls overlook” for its many levels of interpretation: the obvious (reaching the front of the line to take a turn); the humorous: (standing in line to view a wonder of nature); the universal (the falls is always there to be seen, but often we need the right opportunity or perspective to “see” it).

Klaus-Dieter Wirth responded to Hilary Tann’s “night journey—/entering town/I lose the stars”: “Here the poet lost the stars but left us a twinkling diamond of perfect cutting, well balanced in every respect, a high-class haiku demonstrating . . . unobtrusive conciseness . . .”

Two poems in particular prompted Karen Klein’s response. In Gary Steinberg’s “heat lightning/a thousand words/locked inside me” she finds “a perfect blend of nature and human nature. The desire for release from the weather so beautifully expresses the speaker’s sense of not being able to release all he wants to say.”

Michael Fessler’s “withered grass/a baseball/coming apart” is a triumph of “juxtaposition: the end of a season in nature and culture; also, the ambiguity of return. The poet conjures up the Basho “withered grasses” haiku as well, and perhaps we can append that association here as well: the end of dreams of glory on the field.”

Billie Wilson tells us that Lori Laliberte-Carey’s “gold summer grasses” was one of her favorites for its “lightest touch of magic, sweeping me back to my own childhood and allowing me to enjoy her daughter shining amidst those grasses. How do we know she was singing a “make-believe language”? How, indeed! Maybe children really do speak with fairies and angels—and we simply have forgotten how.

Dave Russo places four favorite poems in the larger context of the philosophy of aesthetics, commenting “Haiku may be the shortest "whole poems"—the briefest literary form that can consistently convey a constellation of thought and feeling. In [chris] gordon’s one-line haiku, “her hand covered in orange pulp she slips into her accent”, a woman is juicing an orange: a messy, sensual process, as described in the opening image. The clause "she slips into her accent" suggests an unguarded moment. Normally, she hides her accent, but now, perhaps because she is relaxed and pleasurably occupied, she reveals part of her true self, the person underneath social subterfuge. The resulting lines are like a vivid fragment of memory that consists of two images: two stars that imply a constellation.”

Of Tom Tico’s “after a haircut/light-headed/with spring wind” Dave finds much of the charm located in the pivotal phrase “light-headed”. “It is both an accurate description of the physical sensation of a new haircut and a common expression for “giddiness”, a sensation often associated with spring. This unstrained double meaning lends the poem a feeling of lucky correspondence, like the touch of spring wind against a newly shorn head.”

He also was taken with the Steinberg poem mentioned above, finding that it “presents a vivid, fleeting encounter between inner and outer worlds”, and is reminded of the philosopher Suzanne Langer’s remark, “Art is the objectification of feeling, and the subjectification of nature.”

Of Joann Klontz’s “dim light/the night nurse/describes the rain”, he says “This poem begins with a vague image: ‘dim light’. But vagueness—or the struggle against it—seems to be the underlying subject. Serious illness can make us withdraw from the world and sink into our own misery, but the nurse brings the simplest news from the world: the weather. The word ‘describes’ suggests that the nurse goes to some trouble to convey details about the rain. These details might be innocuous: a way to pass the time, or they might be an act of kindness, an attempt to restore a little bit of the world to someone who has lost touch with it.”

We would feel remiss if we did not add to these excellent exegeses some of our own personal favorites. Peggy Willis Lyles’s “I awaken/saying “mama”—/autumn wind” carries within itself the palpable feel of dream and loss, couched in the language of innocence. It invites the reader to wonder after the connection between this moment of naked vulnerability and that which grounds us, be it parent or memory of parent or merely the autumn wind.

We as peripatetic poets recognize ourselves in Burnell Lippy’s “one suitcase/darkens the next/autumn journey”. We are old enough now, too, to feel the weight of journeys in autumn, and the greater darkness which eclipses not only those things we carry with us, but the journey itself. His other poem in this issue, “curl/of the corn worm/lingering heat”, captures a certain aspect of summer—a moment of indolence with a faint sense of uneasiness—through great choices of word and image.

There’s something deeply satisfying about the juxtaposition of images in w. f. owen’s “dwindling light/ducks on the pond/coast to a stop”. A strong feeling of “everything in place.”

Certain images get a lot of play in haiku journals and it takes something special to refresh them. Yu Chang succeeds in bringing us such a “reheated” image with “Xerox center/60 copies of lecture notes/warm my hand”.

Carolyn Hall has written a powerful September 11 poem through an entirely indirect route. Her “Antietam—/facing into/the autumn wind” focuses on another September day of terrible loss for Americans. And if the answer is blowing in the wind, what is it that we must face, then and now?

A detail which means nothing in particular, but seems to say it all: “last rites spoken/the preacher/zips up his bible” by John Quinnett.
books & reviews Hands On

Both the title and the cover of this book (which features two hands cupped around a tulip) initially put me off from reading it; I expected some sort of introduction to haiku as the expression of a spiritual practice, a book to be the “Seeds from a Birch Tree” for New Age writers. But what I found was quite different in both intent and execution. The authors, a past Frogpond editor and a psychologist, are students of the Insight Meditation Center in Barre, Massachusetts, and this book appears to be a tool for use in thoughtful meditative practice. It does contain haiku, yes, but it is not about haiku; rather, it uses a small selection of haiku as the jumping-off points for reflection and meditation, and I found it both well-written and engaging.

The book is structured around the four seasons, with ten haiku given in each season, plus one for each transition between seasons. Each poem appears by itself on the left-hand page (in a white box against a grey background), and the right-hand page is given over to a combination of rumination inspired by the poem and directions for meditative exercises. The book is also designed to gradually take the reader through a building series of reflections, in whatever timescale the book is read—the early exercises are about focusing on breathing, becoming aware of your surroundings, and then they gradually turn outward to thinking about nature, visualizing positive outcomes and relationships, and keeping a sense of connection even in difficult times, even with difficult people. Awareness, compassion—certainly these goals derive from Buddhist practice, but this book makes reference to Christian scripture and parables of indeterminate source, giving it a more approachable and nondogmatic feel. In fact, the authors make the explicit statement that their conception of meditation is not about learning rules, but about seeing things anew, as they are, and this makes haiku a natural fit for their approach.

As for the haiku included in the book (which I presume are by Forges-Ryan), I found them of a very high quality and pleasing variety. We get all seasons, of course, and also a range of moods, but there were few if any that I would consider to be flawed examples, a refreshing switch from most books aimed at more than the narrowest specialist audience. It is also probably true that the thoughtful pace and subject matter of the prose prepares the reader to receive the poems with maximal perception. In sum, I recommend this nicely produced book as thoroughly enjoyable for appreciators of haiku and for anyone looking to develop more mindfulness and compassion in everyday life.

How free they are—cherry blossoms falling here and there

* * *

I was quite excited to receive a review copy of this book; it is beautifully produced in a pleasing size and finish, and the author is a well-established writer and thinker in the field of haiku and related poetic forms. Thus I had high hopes that this book might represent an answer to the constant need for insightful introductions to the haiku genre designed for a popular audience.

However, I found myself quickly disappointed. First, only about half of the book is actually devoted to haiku itself, writing and reading it; the remaining chapters are given to strategies for “getting your work out there” (Chapter 3) and to haiku-related poetic forms (Chapter 4). The former includes everything from tips for giving haiku readings (right down to exercises to relax your voice before going onstage), considerations for publication (including types of bindings for self-published books), and even ways to turn your haiku into gifts for friends. The latter chapter is a broad compendium of possible forms to try, from those that would be familiar to Frogpond readers (renku, tanka, rengay, haibun) to the less known and fairly obscure (sijo, choka, doduatsu, kouta) and more distantly related (cinquain). A little theory is given for the first two well-known forms, as well as some examples (including a "renga" written by Jane with husband Werner using verses from Basho as a third partner), but in this context it's barely enough to get a start; far less can be made from the whirlwind of descriptions that follows, many of which concern forms that Reichhold admits are not being written currently. One wonders whether this was perhaps more a show of scholarship on her part than a real working guide, as little beyond syllable counts and general topic types are given.

But what about the first two chapters, the introduction to haiku itself? The titles of the sections of Chapter 1 immediately caught my attention as “Four Things to Do Before Writing Haiku” are listed: Learn How to Read Haiku; Know Why You Want to Read Haiku; Be Ready to Change Your Ideas of Poetry; and Find Out What a Haiku Is. Excellent! I support the goal of getting people to “unlearn” their expectations about haiku in preparation for learning to read and write them. Chapter 2 continues the promising trend, with headings like Clearing Up the Conflict Over Counting Syllables; The Place of Nature; and The Importance of Simplicity. Again, many good principles, along with such technical considerations as punctuation, revision, etc.

However, the text very quickly revealed numerous flaws. First, the author seems uncertain of the book’s intended audience. On the one hand, it offers tips for getting started with haiku, from exercises to get the nervous writer off the ground, to thoughts on keeping track of your poems (e.g., records of submissions to journals). On the other hand, many of the arguments throughout are presented in opposition to a sort of presumed “party line”, but no real explanation of the latter is given in terms of its content or rationale; as a result, much common advice frequently offered to beginners (like, “avoid ‘desk-ku’”) is made to seem absurd. Similarly, many suggestions are made for experimentation with the genre, but no real criteria are offered for how a writer might judge the “success” of such efforts, or chart their own progress in mastering the greater form. Experienced writers can put such tips and arguments into their proper context, but those are likely to be the writers who are least in need of a “hands-on guide” to haiku, and beginners are likely to find themselves either bewildered or lacking guidance at critical junctures.
The second major flaw is the almost exclusive use of the author's own haiku (and other poetry) as examples throughout the book. Perhaps this choice was made for expediency, to avoid the tiresome processes of sorting through journals or collecting permissions. However, few writers have the distance to consistently judge the quality of their own work, and Reichhold is no exception. The resulting selection varies widely in quality and appropriateness to the point. This does the reader a disservice by frequently muddying the water.

For example, the following poem is supposed to demonstrate the use of Reichhold's (very useful) phrase-and-fragment theory:

\[
\begin{align*} \text{the cemetery fence} \\ \text{is unable to hold back} \\ \text{white lilies} \end{align*}
\]

She writes, "If the fragment in the last line was [sic] written as 'the last lilies,' the haiku would have been a run-on sentence. By dropping the article, a fragment is created, which causes a proper syntactical break." However, most readers (and editors) would say that this poem reads through as a sentence with or without the additional article, and thus it serves poorly as an example of the intended distinction.

Reichhold also chooses to advocate techniques whose use is controversial in the hands of experienced writers, let alone as guidelines for beginners. Thus, in addition to such fundamental techniques as linkage and contrast and use of wabi/sabi/yugen, she suggests trying out simile, double entendre, puns, humor, and wordplay:

\[
\begin{align*}
\text{strawberry} & \quad \text{dried prune faces} \\
\text{another red tongue} & \quad \text{guests when they hear} \\
\text{on mine} & \quad \text{we have only a privy} \end{align*}
\]

Certainly there is space in the genre for such devices, but I am not certain that these examples make the case that convincingly, nor does the discussion help clarify when such approaches are appropriate. The best the author can offer is along the lines of the thought that such poems "make [the reader] feel very smart when they discover the simile for themselves,” or the notion that “One of the aims of haiku is to confuse the reader just enough to attract interest.”

Finally, sometimes even when stronger haiku are given, they are presented in a context that undermines their effectiveness, at least to this reader, as when a spring nap downstream cherry trees

in bud

is explained as a comparison in which the buds are seen as flowers taking a nap. I enjoyed the more abstract emotional space created by the sense of a person napping outdoors at the first opportunity, even before it was warm enough for the flowers to be out; of happy, lazy anticipation of the season about to arrive. But thinking that the author might see the first line merely as summarizing the next two ruins it for me completely. At the very least, this kind of explication seems unlikely to cultivate sensitivity in either readers or writers of haiku.

In sum, this was a book from which I hoped much, and I was sorely disappointed. It doesn’t even suggest other books for those whose interest has been piqued, choosing instead to point interested readers to Reichhold’s extensive website for further resources, and advocating that old-fashioned readers should wise up and buy a computer if they don’t already have one. As with the book’s approach overall, this seems to indicate that more can be found only by those that already have a headstart. Hardly what one might wish for a first introduction to a challenging and surprising poetic world.

A. C. Missias

Erratum (from Frogpond XXVI:1)

Deep sleeping midnight
My love arouses
a rising moon

Pamela Miller Ness
Eiden, William ORKU II (self-published, 2002). No ISBN. 8 pp., 5.5" x 8.5", saddled stapled softbound. No price. Enquire with the author at 27 W. 416 Rt. 58, Elgin IL 60120. Eiden's approach to the genre is idiosyncratic, and those who like his work will find these to be in keeping. Nice paper, but a better command of layout technique would make these easier to read. The production is no frills, but none the worse for that.

Pelter, Stanley Pensées (Hub Editions, Longholm, East Bank, Wingland, Sutton Bridge, Spalding, Lincolnshire, PE12 9YS UK, 2001). 112 pp., 5" x 7.875", perfect softbound. ISBN 1-903746-25-6. £5.50 from the publisher. Not a book of haiku, but of musings on haiku and other divers things reminiscent of the "Speculations" of the late Bob Spiess, revealing not only the author's sense of humor, which is legion, but his seriousness. An interesting read, and worth the doing.

Jenkins, Nigel Blue (Planet Books, Stad Glanyrafon, Llanbadarn Fawr, Aberystwyth, Ceredigion SY23 3AQ, Wales, UK, 2002). 130 pp., 8.25" x 5.75", perfect softbound. ISBN 0-954081-1-5. £6.50 from the publisher. This claims to be the first haiku collection ever offered from a Welsh press, but the subject matter is certainly tried and true from the English-language tradition. It follows a chronological format; the 10 black and white photos by David Pearl are especially appealing.

Maya, Giselle Sacred Trees/Arbres Sacrés/Heilige Bäume (Koyama Press, 84750 Saint Martin de Castillon, France, 2002). 52 pp., 8.25" x 11.75", hand-sewn with oversize soft cover. Translations by Maryse Staiber, photographs by Sophie Gunther. No ISBN. Limited Edition. $27 ppd. from the publisher. This elegant production is typical of the poet's work, this being a tanka sequence on various aspects of tree lore as acquired in Provence. A brief intro to tanka, and an afterword by Jane Reichhold round out this interesting volume.

Moreau, June just enough light (Koyama Press, 84750 Saint Martin de Castillon, France, 2002). 36 pp., 8.25" x 11.75", hand-sewn with oversize soft cover. Illustrated. No ISBN. $22 ppd. from the publisher. A production of the same intensity as above, this time showcasing haiku and tanka by a longtime and wellknown United States poet whose particular sensibility seems informed with what we might call vitalism. Equally beautiful and interesting as the preceding entry.

Barber, Cathy one drop of water and the glass overflows (self-published, 20 West Point Place, San Mateo, CA 94402, 2003), 13 pp., 5.5" x 4.25", saddle stitched softbound. No price listed. A nicely produced pocket-size book with 13 poems from a sensibility that is suggested by the title.

Moise, Stela Numaio Azurul/Only the blue (Editura Fundatiici, str. 1907, nr. 25, Constanta, 2002), ISBN 973-8146-54-2. 176 pp., 5.625" x 8.125", perfect softbound. No price listed. Enquire with the publisher. The author styles these “lyric miniatures” and this is a fair assessment, as these arise from the “shasei” school of haiku in the main. Somewhat typical of what is most often done in Europe (outside the UK) as a full-blown collection of haiku intended to bring the author to prominence.

Lindley, David Five, Seven, Five (Salvo, Bird Road, Heathcote, Warwick CV34 6TB, UK, 2003). ISBN 0-9513363-3-9. 54 pp., 4.25" x 7", perfect softbound. £7.99 from the publisher. The title is suggestive of the poet’s aesthetic: excursions into generic awe and over-the-top senryu. The overall effect is entry level, not what we expect from one who essays an entire book in the genre.

Cabalona, Yvonne, and Jo Lea Parker and w. f. owen, eds. Blink (Central Valley Haiku Club, 709 Auburn Street, Modesto, CA 95350, 2002) No ISBN, 20 pp., 5.5" x 8.5", saddle-stapled softbound. $5 from the publisher. The first of what is hoped to be many chapbooks by one of our most active regional haiku groups—haiku, senryu, tanka and haibun from eleven members, including several HSA members.

Ross, Bruce How to Haiku (Tuttle Publishing, Boston 2002). ISBN 0-8048-3232-3. 176 pp., 5.25" x 8", perfect softbound. $12.95 in bookstores. There seems a spate of “how-to” books on haiku of late, and as many takes as there are styles and beliefs. This one by Bruce Ross is to be lauded for its breadth—it has useful chapters on haibun and renku and other related forms—and excellent bibliography. It has its own issues of advocacy—I say, read them all and make up your own minds.
HSA

News
The Bernard Lionel Einbond Renku Contest Awards 2002

Comments from the Judges

The first thing we both noticed after eagerly opening our thick packages of renku for the 2002 Einbond Renku Contest, and beginning to read was... these poets are truly enjoying themselves! Almost every poem showed an understanding of renku form and rules. But even more, the poets grasped the joy of writing together.

As judges, we concentrated on looking for a strong hokku, followed by a steady opening, a variety of topics, seamless link and shift, and excellent individual verses. No entry was perfect, and our choice of a Grand Prize winner and two renku for Honorable Mention takes nothing away from the delight we felt in reading individual verses and passages in the other renku.

After careful reading and analysis, we decided to award the Grand Prize to the kasen renku “The Wind Shifts”. The four poets who participated in this renku seemed to trust one another, comfortably tossing each verse off with a light, playful renku spirit. There were many “ooh” and “ahhs” as we read this renku. The first two verses, however, are weak when compared to other entries. A hokku should have all the qualities of a stand-alone haiku. We felt that this hokku was not well-focused in time. But the remaining verses in the opening are skillful and the linking is elegant. In the ura (the second fold) the energy among the poets flows strongly. The “dream of wild persimmons” verse starting this section is just one example of the inventiveness and sensitive link-and-shift that the poets achieved in this section. It might be said that the love verses tend to develop a story, however, “such docile lions” tightens the flow. We also debated the use of “the first ants” as a spring kigo. Time should not move backwards in a renku—for example, from Easter (late spring) to snowmelt (early spring). In this kasen, time flows onward, from “plum petals” to “the first ants” to “opening game”. We appreciated the clever use of a little... word like “first”. The second set of love verses are somewhat troublesome. Avoiding cliché is important in a renku. The second moon link “... a smith beats a hammer” is unique and evocative. Finally, the last six verses move to a quick close, with a variety of focus, both on topics and on human senses—touch, hearing, aroma, and sight. We felt the cherry blossom verse was plain. But then, in the ageku, a henro (a Japanese pilgrim who visits eighty-eight temples) at the “eighty-eighth temple” was a nice surprise, ending this renku with a “warm” feeling.

“Something that Sings”, a nijuin renku is a close contender for the Grand Prize. Its beginning is stronger than “The Wind Shifts”. The hokku, in particular, is interesting as an example of using indefinite words to convey a precise feeling. But then, there are some lazy verses: ‘shouts/and laughter in #4, and “red wine/in his glass/and hers” in #7. Most of the verses in this renku show the evocative power of brevity. But being brief requires careful consideration of the juxtaposition of lines within a verse. In this renku, the second moon verse occurs earlier than is usual, and is a two-line, rather than a three-line verse. A nijuin has four ori or “folds” (as does the kasen), but arranged as 4-6-6-4 verses, and it includes one blossom and two moon verses. Typically, the moon appears in #1 in the second fold, the second moon in #5 in the third fold, and the blossom verse in #3 in the last fold. You can insert the moon verses earlier or later (but not the blossom verse). The linking in the third section is close in feeling, though topics are varied. We loved the impact of “I’d like to be a-l-o-n-e”. And the line break in “scent/of the bending/lilac” is very effective.

“a peacock wanders” showed the strongest start of all the renku submitted for this year’s contest. The hokku concentrates the reader’s imagination, while presenting juxtaposed images that resonate gently with one another. The wakiku (second verse) closely follows the hokku, yet leaves openings for further development. And the third verse nicely shifts to a new locale and feeling. Then the flow continues from the “marathon” to the “derelict caboose”, and the “marked-down pumpkin”. The verses are varied in point of view, syntax, topics, and verse structure in a way that is especially refreshing. Unfortunately, the renku weakens after this promising strong start. Several verses have similar topics ("faded soprano" to "billboard for last year’s concert" or "iris" to "squirt ing flower"). In addition, both blossom verses lack focus.

Writing renku is, above all, great fun. The poems we read resonated with that spirit. We hope that all the participants of this year’s contest continue to write together, and to encourage more and more poets to experience the unique thrill of collaborative verse. Thank you all for your contribution to this contest! Viva la renku!!

Alice Benedict and Fay Aoyagi

Grand Prize: The Wind Shifts

A kasen renku by Billie Wilson (bw), Peggy Willis Lyles (pwl), Mark Brooks (mb), and Carolyn Hall (ch)

the wind shifts—garden beds emerge from snowmelt

bw

soft laughter rises with a yellow kite

pwl

in the toy store,
we all pinch the clerk
not wearing green

mb

does the new man deserve a corner office?

ch

where the map vees
a canyon full of moon

bw

three, no, four mule deer
amongst the piñons

mb

after a dream of wild persimmons
I waken to their tang

pwl

the séance ends abruptly with her sneeze

ch
better make that phone call
if you want a date

back in my day
this meant a shotgun wedding

the former prom queen remembers the king
who went off to college

such docile lions guard the library steps

sweat drips
as Quasimodo greets the moon

tumbling in the waterfall rainbows over rainbows

somewhere in the hall closet
my heirloom pearls

helicopters again
above the search zone

plum petals drift
from the branch she carries to a dying friend

up the front walkway,
the first ants

the home team crowds the pitcher’s mound
at the opening game

a hostile witness on the stand

outside the movie
we kiss and make up all over

endlessly playing our song golden jubilee
and, at last, that trip to Tuscany!

ravens claim the withered field

before dawn
a neighbor empties ashes
from his hibachi

aspirin downed with sake
from last night’s cup

unable to focus on the face of Dali’s Christ

war protestors herd their kids toward the memorial wall

under the crescent moon
a smith beats a hammer at the faire

so soon the bright leaves sodden in autumn rain

impatient
for the paraffin to harden on the canning jars

he caps blank verse with lines that rhyme

a note on the card said “Fill out this check for whatever you need.”

near the yield sign an aroma of mint

hill by hill
the cherry blossoms
along the shore

aglow with warm light
the eighty-eighth temple
First Honorable Mention: Something That Sings

a n i j u i n  r e n k u

by Leatrice Lifshitz (LL) and John Stevenson (JS)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>far, but not too far</th>
<th>the relief pitcher</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>there is something that sings</td>
<td>throws his first one</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in my winter home</td>
<td>at the batter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>the warm work</td>
<td>swimming hole</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>of hauling firewood</td>
<td>filled with moonlight</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>first raindrops</td>
<td>experience</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>fall just so</td>
<td>holding back</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>into the river</td>
<td>the tears</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>shouts</td>
<td>taking the telephone</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and laughter</td>
<td>from one room to another</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>moon</td>
<td>I’d like to be</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>over the empty</td>
<td>a-l-o-n-e</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>schoolyard</td>
<td>with you</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>leaves are turning</td>
<td>library books</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>on lover’s lane</td>
<td>that were lost</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>red wine</td>
<td>Sunday stroll</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in his glass</td>
<td>among the stones</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and hers</td>
<td>at Arlington</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>an equitable</td>
<td>her bonnet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>settlement</td>
<td>with long ribbons</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cormorant</td>
<td>scent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dries its wings</td>
<td>of the bending</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>on a fence post</td>
<td>lilac</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>starched collar, cuffs</td>
<td>an open can of paint</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and posture</td>
<td>on the ladder . . .</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Second Honorable Mention: a peacock wanders

a kasen renku
by Mark Brooks (MB)
and Paul MacNeill (PM)

spring rain—
a peacock wanders onto the path  MB

labyrinth hedges sprout new leaves  PM

in the lobby
a doorman snoozes
past lunchtime  MB

slurping noodles
she trains for a marathon  PM

derelict caboose
a vibrant red
under the full moon  MB

yes! there is a good side  PM to this marked-down pumpkin

fragrantly
the bull moose claims territory  PM

they still debate the death
of Meriwether Lewis  MB

my wife asks
"do these old jeans
make me look fat?"  PM better to send roses

this anniversary  MB

a shared glance
just a pew in front of the faded soprano  PM

there goes a billboard
for last year’s jazz concert  MB

the same gazebo
but the moon of youth smiled more  PM

and those frat brothers will earn their beer guts  MB

before the break
foam is sucked into a wave  PM

stone by slippery stone
the girls cross the brook  MB

sepals parted
but the wild iris
not yet open  PM

another April Fool
sniffs a squirting flower  MB

the tail shadow chases after the kite shadow  MB

hesitation when I asked her phone number  PM

true love shows up
as an old friend  MB

Hamlet bids goodbye to the fair Ophelia  PM

bitterly cold, nothing stirred that night  MB

sparkling snowfield crust  PM

glitter and glue on his pre-school artwork and his cheeks  MB

postage stamps from Trinidad fill an album page  PM

through the spotting scope dozens of floats line up for the parade  MB

I carry the chart toward my barium enema  PM

he climbs
the outer fence
by moonlight  MB

shepherds move the flock to lower pasture  PM

storm windows
installed in place of dirty screens  PM

from new hearing aids
a natural cacophony  MB

our pilot draws something about cleared to land  PM

bees return to the hive
as the sky darkens  MB

a sunrise breeze spreads through the apple tree and blossoms  PM

she washes the sand
off of a conch shell  MB HSA Patrons

Our thanks to these members who have made gifts beyond their memberships to support HSA and its work

SPONSORS (Gifts of more than $100)

Shannon Chamberlin • Pamela Connor • L. A. Davidson
Robert M. Gilliland • Ray Grinnes • Mumtaz • Pamela Miller Ness
Christine C. Spindel • John Stevenson • Valerie Toth • Billie Wilson

DONORS (Gifts of more than $50)

Richard J. Balus • Gary Barnes • Donna Bauerly • Roberta Beary
Eve J. Blohm • Mark Brooks • N. T. Brown • Marjorie Buettner
Shawna V. Carboni • David C. Carlson • Yu Chang • Jerome J. Cushman
Virginia P. Dickson • Rosemary Eller • Rees A. Evans
Maria Flores-Schweinsberg • William Scott Galasso • John K. Gillespie
Harold Gimpelson • Merrill Ann Gonzales • Yvonne Hardenbrook
Donald B. Hendrich • Doug Hunt • Robert T. Jordan
Bill & Joann Klontz • Susan Marie La Vallée • Eliot & Eileen Landau
Bill Lerz • Kate MacQueen • Paul Miller • Robert Moyer
Minako Noma • James A. Paulson • Carol Raisfeld • Patricia Schilbe
Elliott Seitzman • Sharon Lee Shaffi • Lynne Steel • Carolyn M. Thomas
Anita Sadler Weiss • Richard Williams • Jeff Witkin • Clifford Wood

FRIENDS (Gifts of more than $28)

Jean M. Aloe • Kay F. Anderson • Paula Bakalar • Winona Louise Baker
Jerry Ball • Becky Barnhart • Rita Bashan • Cathy Drinkwater Better
Naomi Y. Brown • Cyril Walter Childs • Tom Clausen
Joseph B. Connolly • George Daily • Helen K. Davie • Karla Decker
Joe Dole • Mary E. Durham • Barbara D. Farrington
Ann D. Foley • Anne French • Robert Gibson • Lee Giesecke
Diane Halferty • Carolyn Hall • Keizo Harazaki • Peggy Heinrich
Anne Hensley • William J. Higginson • Merle D. Hinchee
Donald Holroyd • Connie Hutchison • Sachiyu Ito • Sosuke Kanda
Kirsty Karkow • Joseph Kirschner • Nikki Knudsen • Lorna Koch
Mark Koerber • Renée Leopold • Leatrice Lifshitz • Robin Lovell
Diane Lynch • Robert F. Mainone • Mary Lee McClure
Dorothy McLaughlin • Peter & Sarah Meister • Andrea C. Missias
Dr. Tadao Okazaki • Marian Olson • Tom Painting • Sheryl Paylor
Anna Pendino • Francine Porad • Bennett Rader
Patricia Anne Rogers • Ronan • Ce Rosenow • Marilyn J. Sandall
Susan Scholl • Margaret Schultz • Helen J. Sherry
Yasuhiro Shigemoto • Dr. E Robert Sinnett • Joseph C. Stack
Laurie Stoeltling • Johnye E. Strickland • C. Stuart-Powles • Cindy Tebo
Jaxon & Arlene Teck • Allen M. Terdiman • Diane Tomczak
Lynda True • Charles P. Trumbull • Patricia C. Urich
Ronald Webster • Michael Dylan Welch • Paul O. Williams
Jeffrey Winke • Walt Wood • Ruth Yarrow • Karina Young

92 INDEX OF CONTRIBUTORS

ai li...71
Antolin, Susan...38
Aoyagi, Fay...85-7
Arai, Kimiyo...21
Bachini, Annie...17
Baker, Deb...30
Barber, Cathy...83
Barry, Jack...12
Bascand, Helen...49
Benedict, Alice...85-7
Berry, Ernest J...32
Blaine, F. Matthew...32
Boni, Bob...31
Borkowski, Tom...95
Bravenboer, Tim...30, 32
Brooks, Mark...87-9, 91
Brooks, Randy M...23, 36
Broyard, Stephen...67-70
Bullock, Catherine...41
Byrd, Darrell...20
Cabalona, Yvonne...43, 83
Cardamon, Barbara...27
Cardone-Hine, Alvaro...35
Chang, Yu...33, 37, 75
Clausen, Tom...21, 26, 73
Codrescu, Ion...51-5
Cohen, Martin Gottlieb...18
Colón, Carlos...41
Connor, Pamela...37
Cullen, William Jr...19, 34
Cunningham, Mark...25
Cushman, Jerome...61-66
Davidson, Anne LB...40
Davies, Kathryn...29
Davis, Shawn...29
Day, Cherie Hunter...27
Deming, Kristen...13, 23
Dillon, Mike...35
Donleycott, Connie...23
Dorsty, George...34
Duesterberg, Ed...9
Dunphy, John J...38, 39, 58
Duvall, Francis...22
Edelstein, Carly...40
Eiden, William...82
Emrich, Jeanne...11
Engle, Margarita...36
Epstein, Robert...33, 37
Estevez, Efren...71-2
Evans, Judson...26
Evans, Michael...24
Evetts, Dee...14-7
Fessler, Michael...36, 73
Figgins, Ross...31
Forges-Ryan, Sylvia...77
Forrester, Stanford M...3
Fowler, James...5
Gallagher, D. Claire...9, 34
George, Barry...19
Gershator, David...32
Gierat, Brian...18
Gilli, Ferris...5, 6
Gilliland, Robert...22, 26
Gonzales, Merrill Ann...18, 38, 73
gordon, chris...74
Grimnes, Kay...9, 20
Gurga, Lee...15
Hall, Carolyn...35, 41, 46, 73-5, 87-9
Hehman-Smith, Margaret...56-7
Heinrich, Peggy...12
Heitmeyer, Doris...50, 58
Heskin, J. D...20
Hinchee, Merle...6
Holzer, Ruth...25
Howard, Dorothy...73
Howard, Elizabeth...31
Hussey, Larry...30
Huth, G. A...6
Iddon, Jon...34
Ignoffo, Flori...21
Jaguden, Gloria...14
Jenkins, Nigel...82
Johnson, Joyce Sandeen...11
Kacian, Jim...73-5, 82-3
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>karkow, Kirsty</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ketchek, Michael</td>
<td>19, 73</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Klein, Karen</td>
<td>73</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Klontz, Joanne</td>
<td>5, 24, 74, 96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Krivcher, Rich</td>
<td>57</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Krusec, Mark</td>
<td>22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laliberte-Carey, Lori</td>
<td>18, 74</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lather, Rajiv</td>
<td>10, 48</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lifshitz, Leatrice</td>
<td>44, 90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lilly, Rebecca</td>
<td>7, 8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lindley, David</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lippy, Burnell</td>
<td>22, 23, 75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Longenecker, G. J.</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucas, Martin</td>
<td>7, 11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lyles, Peggy Willis</td>
<td>25, 33, 75, 87-9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>m., Paul</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MacNeill, Paul</td>
<td>91</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mainone, Robert</td>
<td>26</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Malito, Giovanni</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maya, Giselle</td>
<td>821</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>McCullough, Dan</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>McGill, Allen</td>
<td>23, 39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>McLaughlin, Dorothy</td>
<td>29, 39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>McMurray, David</td>
<td>37</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>McNeill, Robert</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Missias, A. C.</td>
<td>22, 77-81</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moise, Stela</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moore, Lenard D.</td>
<td>18, 21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moreau, June</td>
<td>82</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mountain, Marlene</td>
<td>6, 13, 45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ness, Pamela Miller</td>
<td>8, 16, 81</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Noyes, H. F.</td>
<td>7, 72</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>O'Connor, John</td>
<td>38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Olson, Marian</td>
<td>31, 37</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Owen, W. F.</td>
<td>50, 56, 75, 83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Painting, Tom</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parker, Arlie</td>
<td>40</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parker, Jo Lea</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Patchel, Christopher</td>
<td>47, 96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paulson, James</td>
<td>33</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pelter, Stanley</td>
<td>39, 82</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piko, Greg</td>
<td>27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piper</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Porad, Francine</td>
<td>30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pou, Alyson</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poulin, Robert Henry</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prasad, Nancy</td>
<td>35</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Preston, Joanna</td>
<td>16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Proctor, Vanessa</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Quinnett, John</td>
<td>75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Raisfeld, Carol</td>
<td>27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ramesh, K.</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reichhold, Jane</td>
<td>78</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romano, Emily</td>
<td>9, 30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ross, Bruce</td>
<td>13, 24, 48, 83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rotella, Alexis</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Russo, Dave</td>
<td>74</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ryan, Edward</td>
<td>77</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sanfield, Steve</td>
<td>59</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Scott, Rob</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shaw, Adelaide B.</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sherry, Helen J.</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shigemoto, Yasuhiko</td>
<td>73</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shurtleff, Hillary</td>
<td>40</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Siers, Marilyn</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith, Mark</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stefanac, R. A.</td>
<td>32, 35</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Steinberg, Gary</td>
<td>10, 26, 73, 74</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stepenoff, Bonnie</td>
<td>41</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sterba, Carmen</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stevenson, John</td>
<td>16, 73-5, 90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Summers, Dean</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sweeney, Patrick</td>
<td>31</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tann, Hilary</td>
<td>7, 25, 73</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tauchner, Dietmar</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Taylor, Mike</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tico, Nathaniel Orion</td>
<td>19, 25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tico, Tom</td>
<td>8, 10, 74</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Verhart, Max</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vistain, Joan Morse</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vukasovic, Vid</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Walker, Marilyn Appl</td>
<td>38, 41</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wangchuk, Karma Tenzing</td>
<td>34</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ward, Linda Jeannette</td>
<td>13, 27, 49</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Warner, Gary</td>
<td>19, 36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williams, Richmond D.</td>
<td>36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wilson, Billie</td>
<td>46, 74, 87-9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wintz, Anita Beverly</td>
<td>33</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wirth, Klaus-Dieter</td>
<td>73</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yarrow, Ruth</td>
<td>40</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zuk, Edward</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
THE HAIKU SOCIETY OF AMERICA

Treasurer’s Report First Quarter
(January 1 through March 31, 2003)

CREDITS:

- Balance from Fourth Quarter 2002: $11,868.34
- Membership Dues and Contributions: 14,203.50
- Education Packets: 455.00
- Merit Book Awards Entry Fees: 60.00
- Logo Contest Fee: 10.00
- Frogpond Samples: 504.00
- PayPal Deposits: 1.14

TOTAL CREDITS: $27,101.98

DEBITS:

- Frogpond Account: $172.19
- Newsletter Account: 1,800.00
- Einbond Contest Postage: 5.12
- HSA 2003 Brochures: 288.86
- Education Packet Expenses: 201.82
- Miscellaneous: 128.91

TOTAL DEBITS: $2,596.90

BALANCE: $24,505.08

Respectfully submitted,

Thomas R. Borkowski, Treasurer
Museum of Haiku Literature Award
$100 for the best unpublished work appearing in the previous issue of Frogpond as voted by the HSA Executive Committee

dim light
the night nurse
describes the rain

Joanne Klontz

Frogpond Capping Poem

writer’s block
the return key doesn’t

Christopher Patchel

(Please submit your two-line cap to the first line “writer’s block” by 08/01/03 to Frogpond, PO Box 2461, Winchester VA 22604-1661.)
Table of Contents

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Authors/Contributors</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>President’s Message</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>Stanford M. Forrester</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Haiku</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>various</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“The Conscious Eye”</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>Dee Evetts</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Haiku</td>
<td>18</td>
<td>various</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Senryu</td>
<td>28</td>
<td>various</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Linked Forms</td>
<td>42</td>
<td>Cabalona; Lifshitz; Mountain; Wilson/Hall; Patchel; Lather; Ross; Ward; Bascand; Heitmeyer; Owen; Codrescu; Owen; Hehman-Smith; Krivcher; Dunphy; Heitmeyer; Sanfield</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Essays</td>
<td>60</td>
<td>Cushman; Broyard; Esstevez; Noyes; Kacian/Stevenson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Books &amp; Reviews</td>
<td>76</td>
<td>Missias</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HSA News</td>
<td>84</td>
<td>Benedict/Aoyagi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HSA Patrons</td>
<td>92</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Index of Contributors</td>
<td>93</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Treasurer’s Report</td>
<td>95</td>
<td>Thomas R. Borkowski</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Haiku Society of America